INTRODUCTION

In order to increase the success of government organizations in achieving their goals, it cannot be separated from the role of apparatus resources in managing organizational management to realize the goals to be achieved by mobilizing functions that include transparent and open organizing and mobilizing functions. This is the responsibility of leadership and staff in administering government. Communication that can create an atmosphere of in-tuneness is communication that is able to build personal contact, namely an attitude of mutual understanding between one another. Personal contact occurs when the ideas and feelings conveyed by the messenger can arouse and move the heart of the recipient of the message, so that the content of the information message can be easily or even directly internalized by the recipient and then put into action. Personal contact can also minimize prejudice or negative attitudes. Prejudice usually arises due to the existence of many differences.

Prejudice is a form of obstacle that can cause the communication process to fail completely. Therefore, by placing the same value system as a benchmark in communication activities, the emergence of prejudice will be eliminated (Mykytenko et al., 2022). An atmosphere of greater integration can be expected because real and latent conflicts can slowly be eliminated. One effort to avoid conflict is to place the value of deliberation and unanimous consensus, as something that must be upheld in every form of interaction. Effective communication patterns play a vital role in creating a healthy work atmosphere. Leaders who use appropriate communication patterns will make it easier to give statements/instructions to their employees to carry out a job so that the employees will more easily understand and comprehend the instructions given (Lee et al., 2024). When there is a problem in an organization, it must be resolved as quickly as possible because if there are elements of conflict, both vertical and horizontal, and it is allowed to drag on, then this will have the potential to disrupt the stability of the work climate, therefore a leader must be able to overcome and anticipate everything that might happen in an organization he leads. Increasing employee performance will certainly lead an organization to more quickly achieve success in realizing the shared ideals desired by all parties in the organization.

Communication patterns in an organization are a very important part in conveying information from a leader to the staff below, which includes sources of information (Susanto & Parmenas, 2021), as a memory center for the organization and the creation of ideas or ideas in order to achieve the desired goals of the organization or agency. Communication patterns are an important factor in facilitating the flow of production or performance, therefore in an organization the delivery of information is very important to support factors that can improve the quality of service in the organization (Fu et al., 2022). Factors that really support communication patterns in an office/agency environment can be seen from the way the Head of the Agency gives orders that can be understood by his employees, the way the Head of the Agency communicates well so that he can better understand the needs and desires of his employees, to be able to better improve its performance in order to achieve the desired organizational goals (Ghani et al., 2022). Heads of agencies who can understand and understand the needs of their employees will enable employees to improve their performance to the maximum.

Communication patterns are a form of conveying a message by the communicant, to convey information and even to change attitudes, opinions or behavior, either directly or indirectly (Aji et al., 2023). The form of communication pattern implemented uses a two-way communication pattern, where this communication pattern can occur horizontally (between colleagues who have the same level of position) or vertically (between superiors and subordinates) in an organization. The communication pattern built within the organization (BKPSDM) in its application does not contain intermediaries, because communication can occur face-to-face or through communication media. The key lies in the communicant’s opportunity or opportunity to provide feedback to the communicator. There are several advantages of implementing a two-way communication pattern in organizations, including the information received is clearer and more accurate because it is conveyed directly by the message source who can also be given a response or feedback by the recipient of the message. That way, this communication can minimize the occurrence of misunderstandings because the recipient of the message can ask questions and confirm the message they receive directly (Yus, 1999). Conversations occur, and can even lead to dialogue, between the two parties involved in the communication. With this conversation, each party will feel more satisfied with the communication they carry out. Two-way communication can create a sense of closeness and kinship and build a democratic climate because it allows each party to convey their responses and opinions. There are several obstacles to the communication patterns applied in organizations, including if there are personal problems such as personality clashes or other interpersonal conflicts, which can create tension and make communication more difficult.
